Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., recently private in the Twenty-seventh Division. in which his father was a Brigadier General, is 21 years old to-day. In celebration thereof his mother is giving a dinner and dance to-night in the Vanderbilt home, 640 Fifth avenue.

A year ago to-night the birthday was observed in a different way. The young man was in New York on furlough from fipartanburg. He and his mother went to the Astor Theatre. The Third Liberty Loan drive was on. Subscriptions between acts went rather slowly until a soldier arose in an orchestra seat and waving his campaign hat shouted: "Here you go. I'll give this hat as a souvenir to the person who subscribes $5,000."

ant as a souvenir to the person who subscribes $5,000."

The whole audience roared its approval, and haif a dosen men dived for the hat. The successful bidder, having written his check, said, "Here, you'll catch your death of cold going home hareheaded," and handed the hat back to the soldier. In return for the hat, the soldier bought a $1,000 bond from a sailor salesman, and not until the astenished sailor read the piedge and told the rest of the crowd about it d they know who the soldier was. The piedge was signed, "Cornelius Vander-bilt, Jr., special despatch rider, Twenty-seventh Division, Spartanburg, S. C."

He is the fourth Cornelius Vanderbilt in the family line. He wanted to enlist the moment the United States entered the war, although he was then not yet 19. On account of his youth his parents restrained him until July, 1917, when he signed up for service and was assigned to the handour term of the Tornelius Comments.

restrained him until July, 1917, when he signed up for service and was assigned to the headquarters troop of the Twenty-seventh Division. At Spartanburg he was hazed unmercifully until its comrades discovered that, far from expecting any favors on the strength of his name and his father's rank, he was anx-name and his father's rank, he was anxious to get the toughest assignments. Then he added to his popularity by writing verse for the Ges Affack, the division's magazine.

When the division finally went to France he was Gen, O'Ryan's chauffeur. The story is that he also numbered both Gen. Pershing and Sir Doughas Haig among his passengers before he left France, which he did in August, 1918, when ordered to American Lake, Washington, to act as transportation instructor. His commission was signed on the

there was general dancing, supper being served at midnight. Mrs. Ralph H. Graves was at the head of the dance committee. The officers of the society are: John S. Primrose, president; Thomas S. Fuller, vice-president, and M. R. Reeves, treasurer.
